DEFENDANT CORE
COMMUNICATIONS, INC.'S
OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO CONDUCT JURISDICTIONAL DISCOVERY

Date: August 7, 2009
Time: 9:30 a.m.
Courtroom: A, 15th Floor
Judge: Magistrate Judge
Joseph C. Spero

29 Defendant Core Communications, Inc. ("Core") previously stated its opposition to 30 plaintiff's motion for leave to conduct jurisdictional discovery in the reply brief Core filed
31 on its motion to dismiss. A copy of that reply brief is attached, and Core requests that it
32 be considered by the Court as Core's memorandum of points and authorities in opposition

1 to plaintiff's motion.

2 Although Core does not believe jurisdictional discovery is warranted for the 3 reasons stated in the attached reply brief, if the Court were to allow such discovery, then it
4 should be limited to the following discovery the plaintiff identified in her motion: (a) 5 "whether Adzilla was operating in California during the time of its cooperation with 6 CoreTel," (b) "the location of Adzilla's servers during the relevant time period," and (c)
7 "the location of Adzilla's advertising operations during the relevant time period."
8 Plaintiff's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion for Leave to 9 Conduct Jurisdiction Discovery at 7:28-8:4. This minimal discovery could be easily taken 10 of defendant Adzilla Inc., which has appeared in the action and has answered the 11 plaintiff's complaint. Indeed, it is discovery that the plaintiff could have taken without 12 bringing a motion.

13 The only other discovery the plaintiff identified in her motion was discovery as to 14 "whether and how much CoreTel internet traffic was routed into and out of California."
15 Id. at 8:3-4. The Court should not allow this discovery for two reasons. First, it is not 16 clear just what the plaintiff would seek by way of documents or electronic data to 17 determine "how much" internet traffic was routed across Core's network and into and out 18 of California, nor is Core aware that any such information even exists. Second, the 19 volume of internet traffic passing across Core's network and into or out of California is 20 irrelevant to whether there is a basis for personal jurisdiction over Core in California.
21 Core's telecommunications network is on the East Coast. Core sells telecommunications
22 services to internet service providers, none of which are in California, who in turn sell
23 internet access to end-users. That end-users might initiate internet traffic that passes 24 across Core's network on its way into or out of California does not establish (a) an 25 "intentional act" by Core, (b) "expressly aimed" at California, and (c) causing harm that 26 Core knew was likely to be suffered in California—which is the test the plaintiff must

DEFENDANT CORE
COMMUNICATIONS, INC.'S
REPLY TO PLAINTIFF'S RESPONSE TO MOTION TO DISMISS

Date: July 10, 2009
Time: 9:00 a.m.
Courtroom: 7, 19th Floor
Judge: Hon. Maxine M.

1 I. INTRODUCTION

2 The plaintiff did not file an opposition to defendant Core Communications, Inc.'s
3 ("Core's") motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. Instead, the plaintiff claims 4 she needs discovery with respect to "new issues of fact" raised by Core in its motion to 5 dismiss "that fall outside the allegations of the complaint that bear on the matter of 6 personal jurisdiction." Plaintiff's Response to Defendant Core Communications, Inc.'s 7 Motion to Dismiss ("Pltf's Resp"), at 2:14-15. Contemporaneous with this response, the 8 plaintiff filed a motion for leave to conduct jurisdictional discovery, which she scheduled
9 for hearing on July 31, 2009—three weeks after the scheduled hearing on Core's motion
10 to dismiss. Docket #43.

11 There is no need to delay any further the dismissal of Core from this case. The 12 plaintiff has submitted no evidence to controvert the jurisdictional facts proffered by Core,
13 and the discovery she purports to seek would not yield facts sufficient to establish a basis 14 for personal jurisdiction over Core. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff's effort to 15 delay the hearing on Core's motion should be rejected, and Core's motion to dismiss for 16 lack of personal jurisdiction should be granted.

17 II. ARGUMENT

18 A. Jurisdictional Discovery Should Be Denied When Jurisdictional Facts 19 Are Not Disputed And The Proposed Discovery Will Not Yield Facts 20 Sufficient to Establish Jurisdiction.

21 In another case before this Court, Magistrate Judge Chen, in denying a motion for 22 jurisdictional discovery in the face of a pending Rule 12(b)(2) motion to dismiss,
23 summarized the applicable legal standards:

24 "A district court is vested with broad discretion to permit or deny 25 [jurisdictional] discovery." Laub v. United States DOI, 342 F.3d 26 1080, 1093 (9th Cir. 2003). Jurisdictional discovery should 27 ordinarily be granted where jurisdictional facts are contested or 28 more facts are needed. See id.; see also Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co., 556 F.2d 406, 430 n. 24 (9th Cir. 1977) (stating that discovery "should be granted where pertinent facts bearing on the question of jurisdiction are controverted . . . or where a more satisfactory showing of the facts is necessary") (internal quotation marks omitted). See, e.g., In re Dynamic Random Access Memory

Antitrust Litig., 2005-2 Trade Cases (CCH) 75, 013 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 7, 2005) (denying jurisdictional discovery because “plaintiffs have made no showing that any sworn testimony by defendants is disputed, and have not pointed to any facts that, if shown, would warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction”).

However, “[w]here a plaintiff’s claim of personal jurisdiction appears to be both attenuated and based on bare allegations in the face of specific denials made by the defendants, [a] [c]ourt need not permit even limited discovery . . .” Pebble Beach Co. v. Caddy, 453 F.3d 1151, 1160 (9th Cir. 2006) (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, a court may deny discovery where “it is clear that further discovery would not demonstrate facts sufficient to constitute a basis for jurisdiction. Laub, 342 F.3d at 1093 (internal quotation marks omitted). See, e.g., Pebble Beach, 453 F.3d at 1160 (concluding that additional discovery would not be helpful because, as a matter of law, “a passive website and domain name are an insufficient basis for asserting personal jurisdiction” and defendant’s website was a passive website).

MMCA Group, Ltd. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., No. C-06-7067 MMC (EAC), 2007 WL 1342586, * 4 (N.D.Cal. May 8, 2007).

B. The Plaintiff Does Not Dispute The Jurisdictional Facts Proffered By Core.

The plaintiff has not put forward any evidence to controvert the jurisdictional facts proffered by Core in support of its motion. Those facts are that:

- Core is incorporated in the District of Columbia and has its principal place of business in Annapolis, Maryland;
- Core operates as a CLEC in Pennsylvania and Maryland, providing telecommunications services to dial-up Internet Service Providers (“ISPs”);
- Core is not authorized to do business in California and has not conducted any business here;
- Core does not have any customers in California and has never advertised its business here;
- Core’s contract with defendant Adzilla, Inc. identified Adzilla as a Canadian corporation headquartered in Vancouver;
- There is nothing in the Adzilla contract that indicates performance of the contract was to occur in California;

- The contract authorized Adzilla to install equipment on Core's network, which Adzilla did in or about March of 2007;
- The only equipment Adzilla installed was at Core's network POPs in Pennsylvania and Virginia;
- To Core's knowledge, it never communicated with any Adzilla employee located in California; and
- Adzilla's equipment never made it through the testing phase, and its equipment was deactivated in December of 2007.

See Declaration of Bret L. Mingo in Support of Core's Motion to Dismiss ("Mingo Decl.") at ¶¶ 3-16 and Ex. A.

None of these undisputed facts suggests that Core has any connection to California. Nor does plaintiff have any connection to California, as she resides in Virginia and purchases her internet connection from a Virginia ISP. Complaint at ¶ 16.

C. The Discovery That Plaintiff Claims She Needs Will Not Yield Facts Sufficient To Establish Jurisdiction Over Core.

In her motion for leave to conduct discovery, the plaintiff claims she needs discovery concerning (a) "whether Adzilla was operating in California during the time of its cooperation with CoreTel"^{1/}; (b) "the location of Adzilla's servers during the relevant time period,"; (c) "the location of Adzilla's advertising operations during the relevant time period,"; and (d) "whether and how much [Core] Internet traffic was routed into and out of California." Plaintiff's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion for Leave to Conduct Jurisdictional Discovery ("Pltf's Mem.") at 7:28-8:4. The plaintiff claims this discovery will show that Core "purposefully availed itself of California law," because it will "reveal the extent of [Core's] contractually obligated contacts with California." Pltf's Mem. at 8:10-12. Citing the Ninth Circuit's decision in Yahoo! Inc. v. La Ligue Contre le Racisme, 433 F.3d 1199, 1206 (9th Cir. 2006), the plaintiff notes that in contract cases, a court "typically inquire[s] whether a defendant purposefully avails

^{1/} The plaintiff continues to refer to Core as "CoreTel," even though that is not its d/b/a but the name of its parent entity. Mingo Decl. at ¶ 2.

1 itself of the privilege of conducting activities or consummates a transaction in the forum,
 2 focusing on activities such as delivering goods or executing a contract.” Pltf’s Mem. at 3 8:12-15.

4 The plaintiff’s argument misses the mark, however, because this is not a contract
 5 case, but one sounding in tort. But even if it were a contract case, the plaintiff’s proposed 6 discovery would not show that Core consummated a transaction in California, or that it
 7 executed or performed a contract here, or that it delivered any goods here. The fact that 8 internet traffic destined for a site located in California may have initially begun through an 9 ISP connected to Core’s network on the East Coast is not the equivalent of a defendant
 10 delivering its own goods to a customer in California. Indeed, it is not even Core that 11 initiates the activity that determines the ultimate destination of the internet traffic, as it is 12 the end-user who decides which web sites to visit or friends to email. If the act of 13 providing network access for internet traffic is sufficient to justify personal jurisdiction in 14 any forum to which that traffic is eventually routed, then Core would not be immune from 15 suit in any state in the union. Such a result surely would offend “traditional notions of fair 16 play and substantial justice.” International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 17 (1945).

18 Because this is a case sounding in tort, the appropriate analysis for personal 19 jurisdiction is whether Core “purposefully directed” any activity at California, “applying 20 an ‘effects test’ that focuses on the forum in which the defendant’s actions were felt, 21 whether or not the actions themselves occurred within the forum.” Yahoo! Inc., supra, at 22 1206. Under this analysis, the plaintiff must show that Core “(1) committed an intentional 23 act, (2) expressly aimed at [California], (3) causing harm that [Core] knows is likely to be 24 suffered in [California].” Dole Food Co., Inc v. Watts, 303 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir.
 25 2002). As the Ninth Circuit held in Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat’l, Inc., 223
 26 F.3d 1082, 1087 (9th Cir. 2000), the “express aiming” requirement will be satisfied if the 27 defendant’s conduct was “targeted at a plaintiff whom the defendant knows to be a 28 resident of the forum state.”

1 The discovery that the plaintiff purports to seek will not establish facts to meet
 2 these requirements. Whether Adzilla had operations, servers, or advertising activities in 3 California would not show that Core “expressly aimed” any of its activities at California.
 4 In its contract with Core, Adzilla represented itself to be a Canadian corporation 5 headquartered in Vancouver. Core had no dealings with Adzilla in California. The 6 contract authorized Adzilla to install its equipment on Core’s network, which it did, in 7 Pennsylvania and Virginia. If, as the plaintiff alleges, Adzilla’s equipment copied or 8 accessed any private information of Core’s ISP customers (or the end-user customers of 9 those ISPs)—and Core does not believe that it did—that would have occurred where the 10 equipment was installed, not in California. And if, as the plaintiff alleges, Adzilla 11 subsequently transmitted this information to California to be subjected to a “Deep Packet 12 Inspection,” then that was an activity initiated by Adzilla, not Core. Such activity, if it did 13 occur—and Core does not believe that it did—cannot be imputed to Core as a basis for 14 jurisdiction. See, e.g., Kipperman v. McCone, 422 F.Supp. 860, 873 n.14 (N.D. Cal.
 15 1976) (“Contrary to plaintiff’s assertion that personal jurisdiction over alleged co-16 conspirators may be acquired vicariously through the forum-related conduct of any single 17 co-conspirator, the Court believes that personal jurisdiction over any non-resident 18 individual must be premised upon forum-related acts personally committed by the 19 individual. Imputed conduct is a connection too tenuous to warrant the exercise of 20 personal jurisdiction”); In re Automobile Antitrust Cases I & II, 135 Cal.App.4th 100, 118, 21 37 Cal.Rptr.3d 258 (2005) (“Jurisdictional facts shown must pertain to each nonresident 22 defendant individually, even in an alleged conspiracy.”).

23 Additionally, the targeted customers for Adzilla’s services—Core’s ISPs and the 24 end-users of those ISPs—were not located in California, but instead in places like 25 Maryland or Pennsylvania or Virginia, where the plaintiff herself resides and where the 26 ISP from which she purchased her internet access does business. Thus, to the extent that 27 the plaintiff suffered harm because private internet data was accessed or copied by 28 Adzilla—and Core disputes that it was—the locus of that harm was in Virginia, where the

1 plaintiff resides, not California. E.g., Pearce v. E. F. Hutton Group, Inc., 664 F.Supp.
 2 1490, 1499 (D.D.C. 1987) (harm caused by alleged invasion of privacy occurs where the 3 plaintiff is located at the time of the privacy invasion).

4 The plaintiff's argument (Pltf's Mem. at 11) that there was harm in California
 5 because she communicated via the internet with California-based companies and their 6 private data must have been intercepted, too, has no basis in fact, and is, in any event,
 7 irrelevant to the jurisdictional analysis. At issue is whether Core expressly targeted 8 California residents and whether harm to those residents was caused in California. Here, 9 there is no evidence—and discovery will not lead to any such evidence—that Core did 10 anything to target Facebook, or Google, or eBay, or Yahoo!, or Craigslist, or Wikipedia, 11 or any other business or individual located in California.

12 III. CONCLUSION

13 The plaintiff has not contested the jurisdictional facts submitted by Core, and the 14 discovery she purports to seek will not yield any facts sufficient to establish jurisdiction
 15 over Core. Core does not have any connection to California, let alone the minimum 16 contacts necessary for it to be sued here. Core's motion to dismiss should be granted.
